Marfanian cigars, possesses, probably, not a single drop of the precious juice of the American tobacco; and the Virginian tobacco contains nearly 7 per cent. The great part goes to Egypt and Turkey, and a small quantity to England. The cultivation of Latakia tobacco has, in common with that of other Syrian varieties, lately received a severe check by the imposition of an import duty of 200 piastres upon its entry into Egypt. "The peasant," says the writer, "cultivates it, but the peasant is relinquishing the cultivation of this article, and prefers growing cereals in its place rather than continue the production 'under the adverse circumstances which now attend it.'—East Mail Gazette.

For practical purposes the arrangement of the work is so complete, that a reference to its pages enables a person who understands English to communicate effectively with natives who understand nothing but Chinese. In this respect the work will be found indispensable to all Europeans residing in China, and to the natives themselves it exhibits a knowledge of their language, and of them are perfectly acquainted. To natives resident in England and interested in it, it cannot but be available occasionally.
It comprises upwards of two thousand large
